The unanimous Declaration of the thirteen united States of America

In Congress, July 4, 1776.

When in the Course of human events, it becomes necessary for one people to dissolve the political bonds which have connected them with other people, and to assume among the powers of the earth, the separate and equal station to which the Laws of Nature and of Nature’s God entitle them, a decent respect to the opinions of mankind requires that they should declare the causes which impel them to the separation.

We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights; that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness.

That to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed.

When any form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their Safety and Happiness.

Prudence, indeed, will dictate that Governments long established should not be changed for light and transient causes; and accordingly all experience hath shewn, that mankind are more disposed to suffer, while evils are sufferable, than to right themselves by abolishing the forms to which they are accustomed.

But when a long train of abuses and usurpations, pursuing invariably the same Object evinces a design to reduce them under absolute Despotism, it is their Right, it is their Duty, to throw off such Government, and to provide new Guards for their future Security.

He has constrained our chase of private interests, and combined a number of our forces against him, to serve their peculiar ends, and evince at once the design and8

He has dissolved his agents too soon, and changed their office, and to prevent the extension of his influence to other States, for the support of his complexion of the people, who, notwithstanding the multiplicity of their numbers, have subscribed to the Declaration, and are in a state of insurrection.
